For children WHO are diagnosed with a severe to profound bilateral sensori-neural hearing loss and fit with bilateral hearing aids.....At what age do you think a wireless microphone system should be introduced in the aural habilitation process? How would you recommend that it be used?

For the same group of children, what do you think is the most common reason to NOT introduce a wireless microphone system prior to entering organized classroom instruction.

Given that you accept wireless microphone technology as an essential part of the aural habilitation process, would you introduce the system at the initial fitting or at a later time? Please provide the reasoning behind your answer.

Do you think there is evidence that use of a wireless microphone system from the time of the initial amplification fitting would interfere with auditory development of localization or speech perception in noise?
